PROGRAM SUMMARY: The PST (Parent Stress Training) Program works to 1) reduce parent stress, which contributes to impulsive abuse of children, 2) provide information/alternatives to violence and 3) encourage supportive parent networks. Group participants study parent enhancement materials, practice parenting techniques and learn relaxation techniques. They also learn about Internet safety and receive information regarding the problem substance abuse can cause in families. A major goal of the PST Program is to make parent education services available to high-risk parents. The program is designed to increase the parent's knowledge base and make positive attitude change regarding nonviolent [parenting in the participants. The LAMP (Lifetime Anger Management Plan) works to teach children how to deal with anger in socially acceptable ways. The participants are taught ways of resolving conflict that do not lead to violence. Recently a special Adult Component for the PST and LAMP classes has been added. These classes are taught at the Bradley County Justice Center-Jail. Additionally, anger management classes are being taught to elementary and preschool children. The average number of people served per month varies from 200 to 500 depending upon the number of interns at the Agency and the types of classes provided. The number of people served varies from 2400 to 6000 people per year.

PROGRAM SUMMARY: This program provides primary and secondary prevention services and facilitates community education. The program provides prevention classes to approximately 20 schools. The program also provides training and education on general awareness of child abuse and proven prevention techniques. The programs primary prevention program offers education services targeting three populations: (1) children, (2) adults in a child's life (parents and professionals), and (3) the community. Children receive lessons aimed at teaching skills needed to promote early disclosure through classroom curricula. Parents receive information about abuse and their role in prevention. Professionals are trained to identify and report abuse and receiving information on responding to reports. The community received information to increase awareness and promote preventive action. The goal is for children to have age-appropriate safety skills and for parents, professionals and community members to be aware of abuse and have the knowledge to respond appropriately.
